Abstract

Background: Quadriceps strains induce discomfort, decreased range of motion, and poorer performance among amateur athletes. Cryotherapy, stretching, and strengthening are used in conventional rehabilitation; myofascial release (MFR) may improve tissue healing even more. No randomized study has looked at the combined effects of resisted exercise, cryo-stretch, and myofascial trigger point (MTyP) release for Grade I quadriceps strain, despite their clinical use.

Objective: To evaluate MTyP release to cryo-stretch and strengthening regimen enhances athletes with Grade I quadriceps strain.

Methods: 40 athletes, ages 12 to 24 took part in a 12-week RCT and were randomly assigned to the experimental group, which received the identical program plus MTyP release and to the control group, which received cryo-stretch and resisted exercise at baseline and after the intervention, blinded assessors measured the 100-meter sprint time, knee flexion and extension using goniometry and discomfort using a visual analog scale.

Impact of a novel physical and electrotherapy in bilateral knee osteoarthritis

Sedhuraja Malaichamy¹, Meghana Palkhade¹, Vivek Swaroop² and A. Yashudas^{3*}

Abstract

Introduction A cure for osteoarthritis is unknown. However, lessen the discomfort and symptoms by implementing several lifestyle changes and therapies. Reducing discomfort, enhancing joint mobility, and halting more joint injury are the goals of therapy.

Purpose To evaluate the combined effect of wax therapy, Ultrasound therapy, Interferential therapy, stretching and resisted exercises when compare to Pulsed shortwave diathermy and resisted exercise among bilateral osteoarthritis knee patients.

Methods This was a randomized controlled trial conducted on participant aged above 45 with Bilateral knee osteoarthritis, in the Outpatient Physiotherapy Department, B.K.L Walawalkar Rural Medical Hospital, Sawarde, Maharashtra. The outcome measure used were Visual Analogue Scale for pain, Goniometer for bilateral knee flexion and extension Range of Motion, and Western Ontario and McMaster Universities Osteoarthritis Index.

Result There were significant improvements in the experimental group and control group in terms of the pre-test and post-test scores for the Pain by VAS ($p=0.000 < 0.05$), average both knee flexion ROM by goniometry ($p=0.000 < 0.05$), average both knee extension ROM by goniometry ($p=0.000 < 0.05$), speed 50 Meters (in distance/time) ($p=0.000 < 0.05$) and WOMAC by physiotherapy ($p=0.000 < 0.05$).

Conclusion The combined effect of Paraffin Wax Therapy, Ultrasound therapy, Interferential therapy, stretching, and resisted exercises in bilateral osteoarthritis knee patients significantly relieved the knee pain with increased knee flexion/extension range of motion, increased speed of walking for 50 m on floor and improved WOMAC Score when compare to pulsed shortwave diathermy with resisted exercises.

Introduction

Osteoarthritis (OA) of the knee, often called degenerative joint disease, is usually caused by the gradual loss of articular cartilage due to wear and strain. It is most commonly associated with pain, stiffness, swelling, reduced exercise tolerance, difficulty climbing stairs, increased risk of fall, and decreased cadence. It is especially prevalent in the elderly and comes in primary and secondary forms: Articular degeneration with no discernible underlying cause is known as primary osteoarthritis. The Purpose: To investigate the effect of McKenzie method with Interferential therapy (IFT) when compare to IFT alone on acute low back pain (Sciatica) patients in terms of relieving pain, increasing lumbar extension range of motion and speed of walking.

Methods: Randomised controlled clinical trial, fifty seven patients were screened; forty sciatica patients aged from 30 to 60 years with no recent injury were selected through the special tests, after randomisation, the experimental group (n-15) was treated with the McKenzie method and Interferential therapy whereas control group (n-15) was treated with the Interferential therapy alone. The primary outcome was the relief of low back pain and increasing the lumbar extension range of motion. The secondary outcome was the speed of walking by measuring the stride length and cadence for 10 meters.

Result: The study aimed to compare the pain, lumbar extension range of motion (ROM), stride length, and cadence of two different teams before and after physiotherapy. The experimental team had an average pain score of 7.70 VAS, a lumbar extension range of motion of -3.70 degrees, a stride length of 56.70 cms, and a cadence of 115.35 steps. In post-physiotherapy, the team had an average pain score of 2.20 VAS, a lumbar extension range of motion of 24.85 degrees, a stride length of 59.65 cms, and a cadence of 113.15 steps. The mean difference in pain, ROM, stride length, and cadence was statistically significant. The results suggest that physiotherapy can be

Abstract: Carpal tunnel syndrome (CTS) is the most common nerve entrapment. Carpal tunnel syndrome affects approximately 2.7 to 5.8 percent of adults in India. Pain and paresthesias in the distribution of the median nerve are the classic symptoms. While Tinel's sign and a positive Phalen's maneuver are classic clinical signs of the syndrome, hypoalgesia and weak thumb abduction are more predictive of abnormal nerve conduction studies. Electrodiagnostic (EDX) studies are a valid and reliable means of confirming the diagnosis.

This case report focuses on the discussion of the NCV study in a 35 year old housewife referred for Electrodiagnosis with the complaints of pain and parasthesias over bilateral wrist joint.

Introduction

Carpal tunnel syndrome (CTS) is a common medical condition, which causes pain, numbness, and tingling in the hand and arm of the affected individual. CTS occurs when the median nerve is squeezed or compressed as it travels through the wrist [1]. The syndrome is characterized by pain in the hand, numbness, and tingling in the distribution of the median nerve. These sensations may be felt in the thumb, index finger, middle finger, and the radial side of the ring finger [2]. CTS is also more prevalent among women as compared to men [2].

Nerve conduction studies are diagnostic tests that can measure the conduction speed of your nerve impulses. NCV can identify nerve damage. Nerve conduction studies (NCSs) are an essential tool in the evaluation of the peripheral nervous system [3].

Abstract

Background:

The simplest definition of satisfaction is the feeling of having one's needs or desires met. Nowadays, the idea of evidence-based practice is in vogue, and patient satisfaction evaluation in medical research is becoming more and more popular. For healthcare workers, patient satisfaction surveys have a number of advantages. By measuring patient satisfaction with Physiotherapy services, information that may be used to

Injuries among female football players: A cross-sectional survey exploring the physiotherapy treatment, injury prevention program, football training, awareness, types, incidence, mechanism and recurrence of injury among players in Dervan "Energia" football competition (under-17 girls), 2023

Sedhuraja Malaichamy and Satyajit kumbhar

Abstract

The purpose of this cross-sectional survey is to analyze the physiotherapy treatment, injury prevention program, football training, awareness, types, incidence, mechanism and recurrence of injury among female players in Dervan "Energia" football competition (under-17 girls), 2023. Around 34 girls were taken part at SVJCT's Sports Academy, Dervan, Maharashtra. The questionnaire was framed in Google form that related to football-related injuries and its prevention program through physiotherapy and rehabilitation. The questions were in English and were translated by the coaches into their local language in case of any misunderstanding. Girls responded to their questions before their games. Answers were framed in a spreadsheet and converted into Word format. Results were analysed and suggestions were given to female football players based on their responses.

Keywords: Female football players, injury awareness, injury prevention program, physiotherapy treatment

Introduction

Women's football is a physically taxing contact sport that frequently involves sprinting, jogging, walking, jumping, and changing directions. The physical demands of the sport vary depending on the level of competition (youth, amateur club, elite club, international), but injury incidence rates (IRs) are high in the women's game at all levels [1]. Even though women's football is increasingly popular and there are more female players than ever, little research has been done on knowledge about physiotherapy treatment, injury prevention programs and the injuries sustained by female football players [2]. The integration of evidence into routine practice is the main focus of current approaches to injury prevention. Influencing

Football players' combined effect of coordination, balance, proprioception and core stability exercises in terms of injury prevention and improvement of performance: A randomised trial

Sedhuraja Malaichamy and Satyajit Kumbhar

Abstract

Purpose: The goal of the current study was to compare the combined effects of coordination, balance, proprioception, and core stability training to home-bound strengthening exercises in terms of lower limb injury prevention and performance of football player.

Materials and Methods: Randomised trial, thirty football players aged 15 to 17 years. The experimental team was preferred with the combined exercises of coordination, balance, proprioception, and core stability and the control team was preferred with the lower limb home-bound strengthening exercises. After four weeks, the outcome measures were noted down in terms of the prevention of lower limb injuries and performance of football player.

Results: In the cardiovascular endurance outcome variable, the average ladder drill time for the experimental team was 3.58 seconds with a SD of 0.95 and for the control; the team was 4.14 seconds with a SD of 0.59. The mean difference ($p = 0.062$) was not statistically significant. In the speed outcome variable, the average 40 yard speed test time for the experimental team was 4.77 seconds with an SD of 0.05 and 4.83 seconds with an SD of 0.07 for the control team. For speed, the mean difference ($p = 0.012$) was statistically significant. In the agility outcome variable, the average agility T-test time for the experimental team was 16.76 seconds with a SD of 0.58 and for the control; the team was 17.41 seconds with a SD of 0.44. In terms of agility, the mean difference ($p = 0.002$) was statistically significant. In the Power outcome variable, the average Wingate power test time for the experimental team was 11.52
